Joe the Manager (Scenario)
As a production supervisor, Joe decides on Friday afternoon how many units of output his employees will be able to produce and on which days certain products will be run in his department. He also decides which of his employees are going to be responsible for operating which machines within the department next week, as his employees are multi-skilled assemblers. On Monday, he informs his employees of their assignments to specific machines by handing out assignment sheets. He tells the employees that the schedule is going to be difficult this week due to the increased number of units. He goes on to tell them that he is sure they can fulfill the schedule because they are such good and skilled employees. Each day during the week, Joe checks the amount of output that the employees have completed and the number of units that have been rejected.

The Busy Day (Scenario)

Don Eskew, plant manager at Control Systems, Inc., sighed as he sipped his first cup of coffee at 5 A.M. and read his agenda for the day. He is giving two company tours in the morning: the first to a newspaper reporter who is writing a story on the new plant expansion, and the second to a group of Control Systems managers from the east coast. Don then has a meeting with the unit manager, Phil Johnson, to discuss Phil’s recent drop in performance (a task Don always hates). Next, Don is spending a couple of hours reviewing the trade journals he receives from his high-tech association and writing up a brief synopsis for his presentation next week to the division president. Finally, in the late afternoon, he will be reviewing the new equipment malfunction and deciding whether to bring in extra people to get the equipment running as soon as possible. Whew! Just another day in the glamorous life of a manager.

142) In a short essay, explain how the definition of a manager has changed over time. Provide an example that illustrates the current definition.
Answer: Managers used to be defined as the organizational members who told others what to do and how to do it. In the past, it was easy to differentiate managers from nonmanagerial employees. Nonmanagers were organizational members who worked directly on a job or task and had no one reporting to them. Managers were those who supervised other employees.

Today, the changing nature of organizations and work has blurred the distinction between managers and nonmanagerial employees. Many traditional nonmanagerial jobs now include managerial activities. For example, managerial responsibilities are shared by managers and team members at General Cable Corporation's facility in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada. Most of the employees at Moose Jaw are cross-trained and multi-skilled. Within a single shift, an employee can be a team leader, equipment operator, maintenance technician, quality inspector, or improvement planner.

143) In a short essay, describe the similarities and differences between managerial and nonmanagerial positions in today's work environment.

Answer:

a. Similarities

In today's work force, both managers and nonmanagers may at times have responsibility for certain managerial activities. In addition, like nonmanagerial employees, managers may carry out some duties that do not involve supervising others.

b. Differences

A nonmanager's job tends to be focused on personal achievement. By contrast, a manager's job is not about personal achievement but rather helping others to do their work. In addition, nonmanagers focus primarily on accomplishing specific tasks. Managers may have their own tasks to accomplish, but they also focus on coordinating the work of others.

144) In a short essay, describe and provide examples of first-line, middle, and top managers.

Answer:

a. First-line managers are the lowest level of management and manage the work of nonmanagerial individuals who are directly involved with the production or creation of the organization's products. First-line managers are often called supervisors, but may also be called line managers, office managers, or even foremen.

b. Middle managers include all levels of management between the first-line level and the top level of the organization. These managers manage the work of first-line managers and may have titles such as department head, project leader, plant manager, or division manager.

c. Top managers are responsible for making organization-wide decisions and establishing the plans and goals that affect the entire organization. These individuals typically have titles such as executive vice president, president, managing director, chief operating officer, chief executive officer, or chairman of the board.

145) In a short essay, discuss the difference between efficiency and effectiveness and include a specific example to support each concept.

Answer:

a. Efficiency refers to getting the most output from the least amount of inputs. Because managers deal with scarce inputs—including resources such as people, money, and equipment—they are concerned with the efficient use of resources. For instance, at the HON Company plant in Cedartown, Georgia, where employees make and assemble steel and wooden office furniture, efficient manufacturing techniques were implemented by doing things such as cutting inventory levels, decreasing the amount of time to manufacture products, and lowering product reject rates. From this perspective, efficiency is often referred to as "doing things right"—that is, not wasting resources.

b. Effectiveness is often described as "doing the right things"—that is, those work activities that will help the organization reach its goals. For instance, at the HON factory, goals included meeting customers' increasingly stringent needs, executing world-class manufacturing strategies, and making employee jobs easier and safer. Through various work methods and programs, these goals were pursued and achieved. Whereas efficiency is concerned with the means of getting things done, effectiveness is concerned with the ends, or attainment of organizational goals.

146) In a short essay, list and explain the four basic functions of management.
Answer:
a. Planning involves the process of defining goals, establishing strategies for achieving those goals, and developing plans to integrate and coordinate activities.

b. Organizing involves the process of determining what tasks are to be done, who is to do them, how the tasks are to be grouped, who reports to whom, and where decisions are to be made.

c. Leading when managers motivate subordinates, influence individuals or teams as they work, select the most effective communication channel, or deal in any way with employee behavior issues, they are leading.

d. Controlling to ensure that work is proceeding as it should, managers must monitor and evaluate performance. The process of monitoring, comparing, and correcting is what is meant by the controlling function.

147) In a short essay, list and discuss 7 of the 10 managerial roles developed by Mintzberg. Include specific examples of each role and group each according to interpersonal, informational, and decisional roles.

Answer:

Interpersonal Roles
a. Figurehead — symbolic head; obliged to perform a number of routine duties of a legal or social nature. Examples include greeting visitors and signing legal documents.
b. Leader — responsible for the motivation and activation of subordinates; responsible for staffing, training, and associated duties. Examples include performing virtually all activities that involve subordinates.
c. Liaison — maintains self-developed network of outside contacts and informers who provide favors and information. Examples include acknowledging mail, doing external board work, and performing other activities that involve outsiders.

Informational Roles
a. Monitor — seeks and receives wide variety of internal and external information to develop thorough understanding of organization and environment. Examples include reading periodicals and reports, and maintaining personal contacts.
b. Disseminator — transmits information received from outsiders or from subordinates to members of the organization. Examples include holding informational meetings and making phone calls to relay information.
c. Spokesperson — transmits information to outsiders on organization's plans, policies, actions, results, and so on. Examples include holding board meetings and giving information to the media.

Decisional Roles
a. Entrepreneur — searches organization and its environment for opportunities and initiates "improvement projects" to bring about changes. Examples include organizing strategy and review sessions to develop new programs.
b. Disturbance handler — responsible for corrective action when organization faces important, unexpected disturbances. Examples include organizing strategy and review sessions that involve disturbances and crises.
c. Resource allocator — responsible for the allocation of organizational resources of all kinds — making or approving all significant organizational decisions. Examples include scheduling, requesting authorization; performing any activity that involves budgeting and the programming of subordinates' work.
d. Negotiator — responsible for representing the organization at major negotiations. Examples include participating in union contract negotiations.

The interpersonal roles are roles that involve people and other duties that are ceremonial and symbolic in nature. The three interpersonal roles include being a figurehead, leader, and liaison. The informational roles involve receiving, collecting, and disseminating information. The three informational roles include a monitor, disseminator, and spokesperson. Finally, the decisional roles revolve around making choices. The four decisional roles include entrepreneur, disturbance handler, resource allocator, and negotiator.

148) In a short essay, discuss which approach is more useful for describing the job of a manager—functions or roles? Describe the contributions of both approaches.
Answer: Fayol's functions approach represents the most useful way of describing the manager's job. This is because Fayol's functions provide "clear and discrete methods" of classifying management activities and techniques. Though less effective than the functions approach, Mintzberg's roles approach does offer important insights into managers' work. Many of his roles align well with one or more of the functions. For instance, resource allocation is part of planning, as is the entrepreneurial role, and all three of the interpersonal roles are part of the leading function.

149) In a short essay, describe the three main types of managerial skills identified by Robert Katz. Which skills are most important to each level of management, and why?
Answer: a. Research by Robert L. Katz concluded that managers needed three essential skills. These are technical skills, human skills, and conceptual skills. Technical skills are the job-specific knowledge and techniques needed to perform specific tasks proficiently. Human skills involve the ability to work well with other people both individually and in a group. Conceptual skills are the skills managers use to think and to conceptualize about abstract and complex situations.

b. Technical skills tend to be more important for lower-level managers. This is because lower-level managers typically manage employees who use tools and techniques to produce the organization's products and services. Human skills are equally important at all levels of management, because all managers must deal directly with people. Conceptual skills are most important at top levels of management. Managers at top levels must use conceptual skills to see the organization as a whole, to understand the relationships among various subunits, and to visualize how the organization fits into its broader environment.

In a short essay, discuss the importance of studying management. Next, list at least five rewards and five challenges of being a manager.

Answer: By studying management, you'll be able to recognize poor management and work to correct it. In addition, you'll be able to recognize good management and encourage it, whether it's in an organization you're simply interacting with or whether it's in an organization where you're employed. Another reason for studying management is the reality that for most students, once they graduate from college and begin their careers, they will either manage or be managed. A final reason to study management is the rewards and challenges of being a manager.

Rewards of Being a Manager
- The most important work of an organization is creating a work environment in which organizational members can work to the best of their ability
- Have opportunities to think creatively and use imagination
- Help others find meaning and fulfillment in work
- Get to support, coach, and nurture others
- Get to work with a variety of people
- Receive recognition and status in organization and community
- Play a role in influencing organizational outcomes
- Receive appropriate compensation in the form of salaries, bonuses, and stock options
- Good managers are needed by organizations

Challenges of Being a Manager
- It's hard work
- Have to deal with a variety of personalities
- Often have to make do with limited resources
- Motivate workers in chaotic and uncertain situations
- Be able to successfully blend knowledge, skills, ambitions, and experiences of a diverse work group
