Megabyte Center, S.A. (Scenario)

Your old friend, Ariel Eskenazi, is the owner and general manager of Megabyte Center, a computer reseller and systems integrator located in Panama City, Panama. Since leaving IBM to start a business in his home country, Ariel's company has steadily grown, due in large part to the business partnerships he's established over the years with large foreign computer and software firms, such as Goldstar and Microsoft. These relationships have helped his company win considerable market share in Panama, as well as in other parts of Latin America. However, since the 1999 turnover of the Panama Canal to the Panamanian government, there has been a huge influx of foreign capital into Panama. For example, several large Asian firms have made Panama a beachhead for their American operations. Tourism is on the rise, with over a score of new hotels built in the metropolitan area alone over the past three years. As a result, demand for Megabyte's products and services has increased markedly, but so has the level and diversity of its competition. While Megabyte's customer base has remained fairly loyal, many longtime customers are beginning to demand price concessions and enhanced service levels in return for their continued business. Additionally, Ariel has learned recently that several of his former suppliers and business partners are considering establishing local sales offices of their own in Panama City. Ariel knows you are very knowledgeable about competitive strategy and calls you asking for advice. You begin by telling him about the types of corporate strategies.

103) With all the changes presently occurring in the computer reseller market, you advise him to stay with his present course until the market calms down. You are recommending which corporate strategy for Ariel to use?

   B) stability
   C) growth

107) In a short essay, explain why strategic management is important.
Answer: One of the most significant reasons that strategic management is important is that it can make a difference in how well an organization performs. The most basic questions about strategy look at why firms succeed or fail, and why, when faced with the same environmental conditions, their performance levels vary. Studies of the factors that contribute to organizational performance generally have shown a positive relationship between strategic planning and performance. In other words, it appears that organizations that use strategic management do have higher levels of performance. And that makes it pretty important for managers! Another reason strategic management is important has to do with the fact that organizations of all types and sizes face continually changing situations. These changes may be minor or significant, but it's still change with which managers must cope. That's where strategic management comes in. Using the strategic management process, managers examine relevant factors in deciding what actions to take, thus helping them better cope with uncertain environments. Strategic management is also important because of the nature of organizations. They're composed of diverse divisions, departments, functions, and work activities—manufacturing, marketing, accounting, and so forth—that all need to be coordinated and focused on achieving the organization's goals. Strategic management does this. Strategic management helps in coordinating and focusing employees by clarifying and pinpointing what's important and by providing the reasons for why they're doing what they're doing. Finally, strategic management is important because it's involved in many of the decisions that managers make.

In a short essay, describe the strategic management process and identify the six stages in the process.

Answer: The strategic management process is a six-step process that encompasses strategy planning, implementation, and evaluation. The first four steps describe the planning that must take place. Even the best strategies can fail if management doesn't implement or evaluate them properly. The first step in the strategic management process is to identify the organization's current mission, goals, and strategies. Defining the organization's mission forces managers to identify what it's in business to do. Knowing the company's current goals gives managers a basis for assessing whether those goals need to be changed. For the same reasons, it's important for managers to know the organization's current strategies to assess whether any need to be changed. The second step is to do an external analysis. Managers need to know, for instance, what the competition is doing, what pending legislation might affect the organization, or what the labor supply is like in locations where it operates. In analyzing the external environment, managers should examine both the specific and general environments to see what trends and changes are occurring. After analyzing the environment, managers need to assess what they have learned in terms of opportunities that the organization can exploit, and threats that it must counteract or buffer against. The third step is to do an internal analysis, which provides important information about an organization's specific resources and capabilities. After doing the internal analysis, managers should be able to identify organizational strengths and weaknesses. This step forces managers to recognize that their organizations, no matter how large or successful, are constrained by the resources and capabilities they have. The combined external and internal analyses are called SWOT analysis because it's an analysis of the organization's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats. The fourth step is to formulate strategies. As managers formulate strategies, they have to consider the realities of the external environment and their available resources and capabilities and design strategies that will help the organization achieve its goals. After strategies are formulated, they must be implemented. A strategy is only as good as its implementation. The final step in the strategic management process is evaluating results. How effective have the strategies been? Have they helped the organization reach its goals? What adjustments, if any, are necessary?

109) In a short essay, list and discuss the three levels of strategy that a large organization must develop.
Answer:
   a. Corporate strategy: this strategy seeks to determine what businesses a company should be in or wants to be in. Corporate strategy determines the direction that the organization is going and the roles that each business unit in the organization will plan in pursuing that direction.
   b. Competitive strategy: this strategy seeks to determine how an organization should compete in each of its businesses. For a small organization in only one line of business or the large organization that has not diversified into different products or markets, the business strategy typically overlaps with the organization's corporate strategy. For organizations with multiple businesses, however, each division will have its own strategy that defines the products or services it will offer and the customers it wants to reach.
   c. Functional strategy: this strategy seeks to determine how to support the business strategy. For organizations that have traditional functional departments such as manufacturing, marketing, human resources, research and development, and finance, these strategies need to support the business strategy.

110) In a short essay, discuss the Boston Consulting Group (BCG) matrix and explain its usefulness in segmenting businesses. Include a discussion of the characteristics for each of the four categories based on the BCG matrix.
Answer:  The Boston Consulting Group matrix introduced the idea that an organization's businesses could be evaluated and plotted using a 2 × 2 matrix to identify which ones offered high potential and which were a drain on organizational resources. The horizontal axis represents market share, which was evaluated as either low or high; and the vertical axis indicates anticipated market growth, which also was evaluated as either low or high. Based on its evaluation, the business was placed in one of four categories:
   a. Cash cows (low growth, high market share): businesses in this category generate large amounts of cash, but their prospects for future growth are limited.
   b. Stars (high growth, high market share): these businesses are in a fast-growing market, and hold a dominant share of that market. Their contribution to cash flow depends on their need for resources.
   c. Question marks (high growth, low market share): these businesses are in an attractive industry, but hold a small market share percentage.
   d. Dogs (low growth, low market share): businesses in this category do not produce or consume much cash. However, they hold little promise for improved performance.

111) In a short essay, discuss the concept of competitive advantage. Include specific examples of companies and their respective competitive advantages to support your answer.
Answer: Competitive advantage is what sets an organization apart, that is, its distinctive edge. That distinctive edge comes from the organization's core competencies, which might be in the form of organizational capabilities—the organization does something that others cannot do or does it better than others can do it. For example, Dell has developed a competitive advantage based upon its ability to create a direct-selling channel that's highly responsive to customers. Southwest Airlines has a competitive advantage because it is skilled in giving passengers what they want—quick, convenient, and fun service. Or those core competencies that lead to competitive advantage also can come from organizational assets or resources—the organization has something that its competitors do not have. For instance, Wal-Mart's state-of-the-art information systems allows it to monitor and control inventories and supplier relations more efficiently than its competitors, which Wal-Mart has turned into a price advantage.

112) In a short essay, list and discuss the three competitive strategies, according to Michael Porter. Include specific examples of companies that pursue each of the three competitive strategies.
Answer: a. Cost leadership strategy—when an organization sets out to be the lowest-cost producer in its industry, it's following a cost leadership strategy. A low-cost leader aggressively searches out efficiencies in production, marketing, and other areas of operation. Overhead is kept to a minimum, and the firm does everything it can to cut costs. For example, at Wal-Mart's headquarters in Bentonville, Arkansas, office furnishings are sparse and drab, but functional. Although low-cost leaders don't place a lot of emphasis on "frills," the product or service being sold must be perceived as comparable in quality to that offered by rivals or at least be acceptable to buyers. Examples of companies that have used the low-cost leader strategy include Wal-Mart, Hyundai, and Southwest Airlines.

b. Differentiation strategy—the company that seeks to offer unique products, which are widely valued by customers is following a differentiation strategy. Sources of differentiation might be exceptionally high quality, extraordinary service, innovative design, technological capability, or an unusually positive brand image. The key to this competitive strategy is that whatever product or service attribute is chosen for differentiation must set the firm apart from its competitors and be significant enough to justify a price premium that exceeds the cost of differentiation. Practically any successful product or service can be identified as an example of the differentiation strategy: Nordstrom (customer service), Sony (reputation for quality and innovative design), Coach handbags (design and brand image), and Kimberly-Clark's Huggies Pull-Ups (product design).

c. Focus strategy—the aim of the focus strategy is at a cost advantage or a differentiation advantage in a narrow segment. That is, managers select a market segment or group of segments in an industry and don't attempt to serve the broad market. The goal of a focus strategy is to exploit a narrow segment of a market. These segments can be based on product variety, type of end buyer, distribution channel, or geographical location of buyers. Research suggests that the focus strategy may be the most effective choice for small businesses because they typically do not have the economies of scale or internal resources to successfully pursue one of the other two strategies.

113) In a short essay, discuss how managers can formulate e-business strategies that contribute to the development of a sustainable competitive advantage in today's environment.
Answer: Managers can formulate e-business strategies that contribute to the development of a sustainable competitive advantage. A cost leader can use e-business to reduce costs in a variety of ways. It might use online bidding and order processing to eliminate the need for sales calls and to decrease sales force expenses. It could use Web-based inventory control systems that reduce storage costs; or it might use online testing and evaluation of job applicants. A differentiator needs to offer products or services that customers perceive and value as unique. How could e-business contribute? The differentiator might use Internet-based knowledge systems to shorten customer response times, provide rapid online responses to service requests, or automate purchasing and payment systems so that customers have detailed status reports and purchasing histories. Finally, because the focuser targets a narrow market segment with customized products, it might provide chat rooms or discussion boards for customers to interact with others who have common interests; design niche Web sites that target specific groups with specific interests, or use Web sites to perform standardized office functions such as payroll or budgeting. Research has shown that an important e-business strategy might be a clicks-and-bricks strategy. A clicks-and-bricks firm is one that uses both online (clicks) and traditional stand-alone locations (bricks).

114) In a short essay, explain the term "first mover" and then identify the strategic advantages and disadvantages of being a first mover in the market.
Answer: An organization that's first to bring a product innovation to the market or to use a new process innovation is called a first mover. Some organizations pursue this route, hoping to develop a sustainable competitive advantage. Others have successfully developed a sustainable competitive advantage by being the followers in the industry. They let the first movers pioneer the innovations and then mimic their products or processes. Which approach managers choose depends on their organization's innovation philosophy and specific resources and capabilities. One strategic advantage of being a first mover is that the company gains a reputation for being innovative and an industry leader. Besides the obvious cost and learning benefits, the company can gain control over scarce resources and keep competitors from having access to them. The first mover also has the opportunity to begin building customer relationships and customer loyalty. One of the disadvantages of being a first mover is that the company is uncertain about the exact direction of the technology and of the market. Also, the company assumes financial and strategic risks. In addition, the first mover accepts the risk that competitors will imitate their innovations. Finally, first movers frequently have high development costs.
